Office of Current Intelligence Comments on Prospectus Describing Basic Intelligence Course

I think it is the clearest summary I have yet seen of the workings of the course, which covers an impressive amount of ground. Much of the information is new, as far as I am concerned.

This appears to be a worthwhile course with a curriculum well designed to offer a good base for further intelligence research and analysis. No criticism.

Chief, Situation Room Division

The basic intelligence course, as described in the attached paper, appears to cover adequately the fundamentals of the intelligence process, and thus achieves its purpose. I think such a course will help the individual and the agency in a positive way.
